KAZAKHSTAN: 79 known administrative prosecutions in six months

By Felix Corley, Forum 18 (<https://www.forum18.org>)

Of 79 known administrative prosecutions in the first half of 2018 for exercising freedom of religion or belief, 61 ended with fines of up to four months' average wages. A quarter of those punished also received three-month bans on activity. Meeting for worship, offering religious literature and sharing faith without state permission triggered such punishments.

At least 79 administrative prosecutions are known to have been brought across Kazakhstan in the first six months of 2018 to punish individuals, religious communities and companies for their exercise of freedom of religion or belief.

Of these, 61 ended up with punishments – fines of up to four months' average wages and, in a quarter of cases, bans on activity for three months, according to a review of the known 2018 cases compiled by Forum 18 (see full list below).

The rate of prosecution is currently much lower than in 2017. The 79 known prosecutions over the first six months of 2018 compare with 284 such known prosecutions in the whole of 2017, of which 263 ended up with punishments (see F18News 31 January 2018 http://www.forum18.org/archive.php?article\_id=2348).

What exercise of freedom of religion or belief is punished?

Administrative prosecutions are known to have been brought in the first six months of 2018 to punish:

- 19 individuals for meeting for worship, hosting such meetings or maintaining places for such meetings.
- 7 individuals for offering religious literature to others for free.
- 12 individuals and 2 companies for offering religious literature, icons or other items for sale.
- 6 individuals for offering religious items for sale online.
- 11 individuals for posting religious materials online.
- 15 individuals for sharing faith with others.
- 3 Muslims for praying in mosques not in accordance with the state-backed Muslim Board's regulations (the second year such punishments have been imposed).
- 1 individual for teaching their faith.
- 1 religious leader for allowing children to be present or conducting religious rites against the wishes of one parent.
- 2 religious communities for failing to fulfil official demands for safety/security measures.

Forced to stop praying in home

Among the cases brought to court was one to punish a 55-year-old Muslim for using his home for worship and religious teaching in the village of Firdausi in Maktaaral District of South Kazakhstan Region (now Turkestan Region), Kazakhstan's southernmost point.

Abdizhalil Bakhiyev regularly held the namaz, taught villagers prayers and allowed local people to read his religious books. Police arrived at his home on 10 February, detaining those present and seizing his religious books, according to the subsequent court decision. A state "expert analysis" of his books from 12 March concluded that they were not extremist or terrorist and did not incite religious discord.

On 10 April, Judge Gulzhazira Kaldybekova of Maktaaral District Court No. 2 found Bakhiyev guilty of hosting prayers and holding lectures on religion without permission and fined him 35 Monthly Financial Indicators (MFIs), about three weeks' average wages for those in formal work. She also banned his activity for three months and ordered 20 Arabic books and a DVD with religious content seized from him to be confiscated and held in the case file (see below).

Bakhiyev told the court he did not know that hosting worship and holding religious talks required state permission. He said he had already begun to apply for state registration for a community. The court decision notes several times that Bakhiyev did not have formal religious education.

The Kazakh authorities allow only one Muslim organisation to gain state registration in the whole country, the state-backed Muslim Board. The state allows mosques to exist only if they are part of the Board. The Board itself requires all mosques and individuals to adhere to the Hanafi Sunni school of Islam (see Forum 18's Kazakhstan religious freedom survey http://www.forum18.org/archive.php?article\_id=2409).

On 3 May, bailiffs from the local Justice Department began action to recover the money for the fine from Bakhiyev, according to their records. Bakhiyev had told the court that he was the only breadwinner for his entire family.

Punishments

Of the 79 cases, 73 were heard in court. The remaining 6 were summary police fines, handed down to church members after police raided the Sunday morning meeting for worship of a Council of Churches Baptist congregation in Oral (Uralsk) on 21 January. The church chooses to meet without seeking state permission. After numerous complaints from Baptists, Oral Police cancelled all six fines on 17 May.

All 61 of those punished were fined between 35 and 200 Monthly Financial Indicators (MFIs), 84,175 Tenge to 481,000 Tenge. This represents between three weeks' and four months' average wages for those in formal work (though a much greater burden for unemployed individuals and pensioners).

In addition, 19 of the court decisions ordered three-month bans on various activity, such as distributing religious literature or meeting for worship. A 20th court decision banned a church from meeting for one month, though this and the fine were overturned on appeal.

Courts generally ordered the return to individuals of seized religious literature, phones and computers, but in one case a court (Bakhiyev, see above) ordered 20 books and a DVD containing religious texts to be seized. Unlike in 2017, no seized religious literature is known to have been ordered destroyed in the first six months of 2018.

Unlike in 2017, no individuals were ordered deported to punish them for exercising freedom of religion or belief in the first six months of 2018.

78-year-old among those fined

Of the 75 administrative cases known to have been brought against individuals in the first six months of 2018, 56 were against men and 19 against women.

In addition to the 18 known individuals (both commercial sellers and private individuals) brought to court for offering religious literature and items for sale, 32 of those brought to court were Muslims, 10 were Jehovah's Witnesses, 14 were Baptists (12 of them Council of Churches Baptists) and 1 was a Pentecostal.

The oldest individual known to have been punished was Jehovah's Witness Taisiya Yezhova. She was 78 and a half years old when a court in Kostanai Region fined her in February for hosting religious meetings in her home (see below).

Yezhova is not the oldest known victim of such punishments for exercising the right to freedom of religion or belief. In May 2016, at the age of 89 and a half, former Soviet-era Baptist prisoner of conscience Yegor Prokopenko was again fined for leading a meeting for worship in Zyryanovsk in East Kazakhstan Region. A police officer fined him 100 MFIs (see F18News 14 June 2016 http://www.forum18.org/archive.php?article\_id=2188). Pensioners in their late seventies are also frequently fined (see F18News 31 August 2016 http://www.forum18.org/archive.php?article\_id=2212).

Criminal convictions also

In addition to these punishments for exercising freedom of religion or belief imposed under the Administrative Code, individuals are also punished under the Criminal Code for exercising freedom of religion or belief. On 6 April a Karaganda court jailed three Sunni

Muslims - Kazbek Laubayev, Marat Konyrbayev and Taskali Naurzgaliyev – for three years each for meeting to drink tea, pray and discuss their faith together. They were accused of membership of the banned Muslim missionary movement Tabligh Jamaat (see F18News 22 May 2018 http://www.forum18.org/archive.php?article\_id=2379).

Naurzgaliyev, as well as three other Muslims – Eldar Kenzhetayev, Akilbek Kasen and Zhasulan Karabayev - investigated as part of the same criminal case but against whom the criminal charges were dropped in early 2018, were among those punished under the Administrative Code (see below).

This compares with the 24 individuals known to have been given criminal convictions in 2017 to punish the exercise of freedom of religion or belief. Of these, 21 were Sunni Muslims, 2 Jehovah's Witnesses and 1 Baptist. Of the 24 (all of them men), 21 received prison terms and 3 received restricted freedom sentences, where they live at home under restrictions (see F18News 5 March 2018 http://www.forum18.org/archive.php?article\_id=2359).

Legal amendments deferred

Proposals to amend Administrative Code Article 490 ("Violation of the Religion Law") were contained in a draft Amending Law, which proposed many wide-ranging changes to other laws also, including the 2011 Religion Law. The lower house of parliament, the Majilis, approved the Amending Law on 23 May and it was then sent to the upper house, the Senate (see F18News 5 June 2018 http://www.forum18.org/archive.php?article\_id=2384).

A Working Group of the Senate's Social and Cultural Development and Science Committee held hearings on the draft Amending Law on 8 and 13 June. However, further consideration was halted and proposed further hearings were cancelled.

"The [Senate] leadership decided to postpone consideration," an official from the Senate Committee told Forum 18 on 22 June. The official gave no reason for the decision. "The draft will be considered again after the holidays." The Senate resumes its work after the summer break at the beginning of September.

"A very large packet of laws were considered," Senator Bakytzhan Zhumagulov, a member of the Social and Cultural Development and Science Committee, told Svetlana Glushkova of CurrentTime.tv on 29 June. "I think this is the only reason it was postponed."

The Chair of the Social and Cultural Development and Science Committee, Byrganym Aitimova, told CurrentTime.tv that "we felt the need and know that it would be better to discuss this [draft Amending Law] with civil society and religious organisations, and we deputies and members of the Senate have questions that should be discussed".
